Practicum Module

The Practicum Module is your opportunity to put your study into practice, combining all of the elements of your personal use with your hand skills with your teaching skills.

It is an essential form for actually learning to teach, because ‘real’ students don’t respond the same way that your fellow trainees respond. It’s your ‘reality check’! It’s not enough that you understand what you are saying doing - does your student get it?

It is the “training wheels” of the program - we help you keep your balance and nerve, while you peddle and steer.

The Practicum is incorporated at the end of the High Touch course and throughout the Teacher Training course, in level-appropriate forms.

High Touch students have the opportunity to be mentored as they integrate Alexander’s Principles into their own professional work.

Trainees have the opportunity to observe lessons, to apprentice teach lessons and workshops, and to be mentored as they begin to teach lessons and workshops on their own.
